Travel Near & Travel Far: Step Out Of Your Disabled World!

Synopsis

I have myotonic dystrophy. My dad is my constant travel companion and buddy. For the past fifteen years, we have traveled locally, across the U.S., and internationally despite my limitations, and it has opened up my life to so many new and interesting experiences. Perhaps you have a disability and dream about traveling but are afraid of the challenges you might face. Or perhaps you traveled but did not enjoy it because of your limitations or the fear of leaving the security of your home. We know firsthand what the risks of travel can be. Still, we firmly believe that anyone who is mobile can travel and enrich their lives and even improve their health! The old saying "No risk, no gain" is true, but with the aid of a capable travel companion, awareness of your limitations, and a "can do" attitude, you can have many memorable trips. Travel can change your life. Start with local trips to ease into traveling. We learned how to be "savvy" travelers. You can, too. Learn from our hands-on experiences everything from how to pack for a trip to booking accessible places to traveling on a budget. Customer Reviews

Not what I expected. My husband had PD and we where hoping this would be more of a how to and ideas that would help us in traveling. It didn't.

Very helpful information for traveling when one has mobility issues.

Terry and my brother Barry are indeed world travelers. I believe I was with them when they went dog sledding in Alaska. Nothing holds them back from enjoying nature in all it's beauty. I recall going fishing with them on that trip. Terry caught the biggest salmon, while we saw huge whales breaching the bay all around us. Truly a memorable sight to behold. Their book does a great public service to the disabled community. I recommend it highly!
